Three-part virtual series on the Black Economy, Each month Moore & Lowe welcome guests from disparate sectors of the Black economic landscape. July's featured guests: Tiffany Joi, Ghian Foreman, and Anton Seals Jr

Join Arts + Public Life this summer for a three-part conversation about the Black economy.

Artist Rick Lowe and journalist Natalie Moore team up to dish and dissect the intersections of race and economic development. Presented in conjunction with Black Wall Street Journey—a hub for neighborhood regeneration initiated by Lowe in Washington Park—and anchored by the centennial anniversary of the 1921 Tulsa Race Massacre and observation of the historic Black Wall Street, guests from disparate sectors of the Black economic landscape will weigh in on cultural dimensions of Black ownership, business, self-reliance, determination and mutual aid.

About the series

CHOP IT UP is an Arts + Public Life virtual dinner series, where viewers sit down with an intimate group of notable practitioners—ranging from artists and designers to journalists and entrepreneurs—for an informal conversation. Over home cooked meals, or dinner ordered from local favorites, practitioners serve up aspects of their practice or craft while exploring the intersections of their work. Gather around our virtual table for 90 shared minutes of candid “industry” conversation.
