

Black Wall Street Journey

An aerial photograph of multiple city blocks presented at an angle. Two streets run the length of the photograph with a garden corridor in between the lanes. The text Black Wall Street Journey is superimposed in bold yellow font on top of the garden corridor over the entire length of the photograph.

In his first Chicago-based “social sculpture,” Rick Lowe is developing Black Wall Street Journey. The multifaceted city-wide project pays tribute to the building of Black wealth, using public art to tell the stories from the journeys of Black communities in Chicago and beyond.

Black Wall Street Journey builds on the connection between Chicago and Tulsa, home to the prosperous Greenwood neighborhood known as Black Wall Street and target of the 1921 Race Massacre killing over 300 Black Tulsans and sending over 10,000 looking for refuge. Black Wall Street Journey's mission is to highlight the innovative minds and entities that have made Chicago a hub of Black prosperity using public art to inform and promote to the general public about Black wealth.

Urban Juncture

Black Wall Street Journey has a visible presence at multiple Toward Common Cause venues. As part of a residency at the Neubauer Collegium for Culture and Society and in collaboration with researchers at the Mansueto Institute for Urban Innovation and the Department of Sociology at the University of Chicago, Lowe and the project's community advisory board have created the 24-hour Black wealth video stream Black Wall Street Journal. The journal is on view in locations across Chicago—including the School of the Art Institute of Chicago Galleries in the Loop, the Smart Museum of Art, and Urban Juncture—and features local Black-owned businesses, curated texts by Natalie Moore, and research surrounding Black wealth.

Other dimensions of Black Wall Street Journey include a series of posters, public murals by Dorian Sylvain, a CHOP IT UP conversation series about the Black economy, and a program in collaboration the Smart Museum of Art and Chicago Housing Authority's 2021 summer teen program.
